

This is the story of 'Escape Before Night'. With the purchase of the game, you will have the story included at no extra cost. As a creator,

I like to share what happens so that you can better enjoy the experience of my digital creation, in this case, the video game. Of course, it's not the most creative, ingenious, or graphically superior game, but I would like you, as a player, to understand the story of this video game.

Escape before night

Day one:

C was worried because she needed to eat. Apples often fell to the ground, and some were kicked around. In the backyard of C and Tony's house, there was always one lying around in the same spot. It seemed to magically regenerate. Furthermore, C was concerned because she needed to water her backyard plants and wanted to retrieve Toky, her childhood plushie that she held onto because her mother had given it to her. C couldn't go out to look for it herself because she was scared. The last time she stayed out until night watering the plants while Tony slept, she saw a very strange, eerie figure in the distance that seemed to have something very bright in what looked like its stomach. Terrified, she ran inside the house. That's when she noticed something odd: searching throughout the house, she couldn't find Toky and, startled, left her watering can outside. Being locked in the house, she simply decided to sleep and search for Toky outside the next day.

That's when she told Tony what happened and asked him to please find the watering can, Toky, and bring an apple for her snack.

Tony agreed without any trouble. When he went out, he saw the three things C asked for in the distance, but he decided to use his self-made skateboard to fetch them. For some reason, when he was about to grab Toky and put it in his backpack, he encountered a strange little creature fiercely protecting the plushie.

With some fear, Tony managed to grab it anyway and hurried back home before it got dark. Tony worked until 4 PM every day, except Sundays. That's how he retrieved the three items and left them in the house before nightfall.

Day two:

Upon arriving home, Tony tells C about the creature he saw. He mentioned that, far from feeling scared, he was eager to find out what was happening outside. He promised her that the next day, after work, he would go investigate.

In the morning, Tony heads to work, pondering what could be happening. He worked at a company as a supervisor, being an electronic engineer.

That evening, upon returning home, a worried C informs Tony that once again, while watering, she found out that Toky had disappeared. Once more, Tony goes outside to retrieve the watering can and the plushie. As he hadn't had a snack, he decides to grab an apple. He then heads to the backyard to collect the items and escape before nightfall. The only difference Tony noticed from the previous day was encountering two creatures this time, not guarding Toky but the apple he always took and the watering can.

With some fear, they discuss with C as the plushie had disappeared again by nightfall...

Day three:

Tony was a bit worried because there were no more apples. He had to search, along with Toky, who was missing again, and the watering can, still lying in the yard since the last time C watered the plants. Simply upon returning from work, he goes for his third search, on the third day since this started happening. Clouds were visible in the distance, as if it were going to rain; C loved the rain, and it made her happy.

That's when Tony saw three creatures, which he nicknamed 'bugui' for no reason. He noticed that each creature was guarding an object. He grabbed the three objects without any trouble and left unscathed. C noticed it was raining and became happy. It seemed that Toky wasn't going to escape again...

Day four:

After the rain, Toky disappears again. C is very scared this time, as it's still cloudy, and she doesn't even want to go outside to investigate. The watering can is in the yard with dirty water, although it wasn't necessary. C had been watering the plants every day, and besides, it had rained, so there was no need to water them, only to bring the watering can.

Once again, coming back from work a bit tired, Tony tells C that he will go look for the things. She responds fearfully not to look for Toky or the watering can, as they weren't necessary. Nevertheless, Tony insists on bringing everything.

Contrary to what Tony imagined, upon going out, there were four 'buguis', one of them red and seemed more aggressive. Upon returning home after retrieving the three objects, C notices that Toky is broken, torn. Consequently, she decides to fix it and argues with Tony for not being careful enough.

Another day had passed, and anger coupled with fear consumed Tony. Therefore, he decides to set his plan in motion in his home workshop...

Day five:

Tony shouts to C, 'We can't run, Toky is angry.' She had disappeared and knocked over a chair before; she seemed furious. Tony deduces that it seems this plushie was resisting staying in the house. For the first time after work, Tony didn't want anything to do with going to search for the objects, but he wasn't going to send C to do it.

C pleads with him to be careful and do it. It took them a while to decide; night was slowly falling, but finally, Tony decides to go, knowing he would go one last time the following day, with his plan almost finished. He decides to study the 'buguis' more to be able to eliminate them next time.

As he goes, he encounters one red, one black, and two violet ones, as he commonly saw. It's evident that the most aggressive and malicious was the black one, as it was very fast and seemed to cause a lot of damage. He gathered the necessary information for his project, the 'Anti-Buguis'.

He returns home, leaves the objects, and tells C about it. She wanted to know what he was planning in the workshop, but as they go there, something happens. The lights go out, and Tony can't continue making what he was doing, the Anti-Buguis. They decide to go to sleep.

Day six:

One last time, Tony decides to check what was happening. The watering can was outside because the night the power went out, there was a strong wind that blew it out. And once again, Toky had disappeared. But Tony swore it would be the last time he'd look for it because once he finished his project, he would eliminate the 'buguis' and go outside at night to also eliminate the creature C saw and nicknamed 'Bug'.

Tony goes to search for the three objects, this time without surprises: two violet ones, one red, and one black. He escapes in time, almost dusk. He was eager to quickly finish the anti-buguis weapon to courageously eliminate them at night. Finally, he finishes it; there was very little left...

Night:

When Tony goes outside, he spots Toky in the distance and wonders what it's doing there, as he had just recovered it. It seems to vanish during the night. He goes out with his skateboard to grab it, carrying his weapon in the backpack since there were no 'buguis' in sight. As he approaches and is about to grab Toky, Bug appears, the creature that C had seen before all this began.

Bug starts chasing Tony everywhere, moving ferociously. Tony, very concerned, hadn't managed to grab Toky, but it disappeared out of nowhere. He quickly rides his skateboard back home.

Upon arriving, C wasn't there, and in the middle of the room, Toky could be seen with a smile, and through the window, Bug's eye, the same one it had on its stomach.

Before heading out with the anti-buguis weapon, Tony heard someone shouting 'Escape.'

It's then when he faints. The lights go out. And the story ends, without knowing what happens next after this eerie event.
